"If wealth and dominion follow result of faith and enthusiasm, they are good. But if wealth and dominion are made a primary object, and are trusted as a source of national strength instead of its consequence or evidence, they prove fact that very few nations have achieved wealth or dominion without suffering loss of faith and enthusiasm and remaining with the empty husk of greatness, at the enlightened restraints of tradition. I believe that each of these philosophies is crproneous; that the one means a revision toward savagery, the other a degeneration toward social weakness.

"There is a school of writers like Zola or D'Annunzio, which lays great stress on what it calls the primal instincts of mankind. These writers think that man remains at bottom an animal, moved by animal impulses and passions; that to feel these passions strongly is a sign of strength, and that to have them under complete control is an indication of weak-
